Presiding Points

1. At an open meeting, if the President desires to enter into discussion, he must relinquish the Chair, and must not take the Chair again until the subject has been disposed of.
2. The President must be impartial, assigning the Floor in the order that it was claimed.
3. The President must always keep the members present informed of the subject on which they are voting, the result of the vote, and the item of the agenda that is to be considered.
